Delicatessen Shop Olivino

Olivino is a delicatessen shop complementary to the newly opened restaurant Olivomare, with which it shares the appealing aubergine coloured shop front as well as a graphic taste for its interiors. It is of rather small proportions, if only the part accessible to customers on its left side is considered. At the entrance a staircase protected by a full height frameless glazed partition leads to the storage in the basement and is adjacent to a perimetrical wall entirely covered by a cladding finished with a double layer (white and black) of thick opaque laminated plastic, on which has been engraved a decorative pattern of variously oriented bottles and glasses.

The Zetter

Pivotal to the design of The Zetter is a new five-story atrium, around which walkways to all of the 59 rooms are situated. This atrium allows light and air to flood into the building, naturally illuminating and ventilating the circulation and public space on every floor and reducing the hotel's dependency on artificial ventilation systems. This principle is carried into each guestroom where the new sliding sash windows allow guests to ventilate each room naturally and controllably. The use of water has been carefully considered in the building. A borehole was drilled directly below the hotel to tap into large water reserves trapped in the chalk strata under London.
